F. H. A. FEDERATION RALLY HELD

Despite the wind-driven rain, forty-five of the local F. H. A. girls and Miss Laura Mottley, Advisor, came prepared to go to the Campbell-Appomattox Federation Spring Rally Friday at Altavista.

If you could have been on the bus, you would have realized the girls were still full of pep, though we knew we would be late. We changed buses numerous times before leaving and of course had to turn around and go back to get things left on the last bus we were on.

On arriving, we had missed the business session, but we enjoyed the timely prepared program. Our contribution was a skit called "Sixteen," which really went over well. Whale props were being set up for the play, Ann Moore and Sandra Pillow sang two selections.

APPOMATTOX HIGH SCHOOL

Did You Know That There is a Shortage of 250,000 Secretaries In the United States

What are we doing about this shortage in our high school? We will graduate about fifteen girls that have had two years of shorthand and typing and some additional commercial work. But most of these girls will need additional training before they can qualify for secretarial positions.

Next you will want to know what steps are being made to improve the curriculum so that those students that are interested in secretarial positions will have an opportunity to receive the proper training. At the present time we have set up a curriculum for Vocational Office Training. However, the results of this training will not show until the students of this new curriculum are graduated in 1960 and take their places in the business field. Additional courses are being offered next year starting with the ninth and tenth grades. But courses and teachers with the proper certificates are not enough to insure properly trained secretaries. Too many people believe that all we need are some typewriters, which in some cases, are fifteen or twenty years old, and a teacher in order to produce secretarial personnel.

This certainly is fallacious reasoning for students need modern typewriters and various types of business machines along with adequate training in the use of all those machines so that the job of educating the future employee of the business office is done by the school and does not become the task of the employer. Many business men complain that they have to spend the first year training their secretaries and then they leave them for better paying positions just when they are properly trained. This is very expensive and time consuming for the empoyers, but with the present scarcity of qualified secretaries and the schools not graduating adequately trained students, there is no other choice for those empoyers.

The schools cannot be held fully accountable for the inadequate training of its students if necessary equipment is not made available. Your school has the curriculum outlined for the next four years, and life students have been oriented for the program. All we need now is the necessary equipment.

Many of the business men have willingly agreed to help train the students enroling in the Vocational Office Training Curriculum by giving the students part time work in the Senior Year of school just as they have for the Diversified Occupational and Distributive Education Courses, but these students need formal education before they commence their on the job training. Therefore, we feel confident that we can do a creditable job of helping relieve the shortage of qualified secretaries and at the same time provide a number of our graduates with satisfactory vocational training if we are able to secure adequate equipment.
